Eight Additional Nez Perce Soldiers of World War I are Identified

In 2019 eight (8) additional Nez Perce soldiers of World War I were identified with the help of the Sequoyah National Research Center that is partnered with the U.S World War I Centennial Commission. The eight new Nez Perce veterans identified are; Samuel Jackson, William Lott, John D. Meek, Sam Scout, Albert Sheldon, Walter Oliver Sheldon, Daniel Williams, and Joseph C. Hart. As part of this project, the Modern Warriors of World War I was born as a database to identify an estimated 12,000 American Indian and Alaska Native men that served in World War I. The website is called "American Indians of World War I" and the database currently has over 6,000 names of Native veterans from approximately 200 tribes. The database is continually being updated, and staff is reaching out to tribal offices to verify names of men and their enrollment. The database can be found at ww1cc.org/americanindian and additional information can be sent to Erin Fehr at ehfehr@ualr.edu.

Stories from our Past

The Great War Scout, Henry George

World War I (WWI), also known as the Great War, was a global war originating in Europe between the Allies and Central Powers. It lasted from July 28, 1914 to November 11, 1918. This year's Nov. 11, 2019 Veterans Day observance marks one hundred one years since the armistice that ended fighting in WWI. Officially WWI would end with the Treaty of Versailles signed on June 28, 1919. Though the actual fighting ended seven months prior when the Allies and Germany put into effect an armistice on the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month. On Nov. 11, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson recognized the first Armistice Day, which Congress recognized in 1938 to become an official holiday to honor veterans of WWI. Today, we acknowledge this as Veterans Day.

In all of the Nation's military actions since the Revolutionary War to present day, in most actions, more Native Americans per capita have served in the Armed Forces than any other group of Americans. The Nez Perce have been involved with the US Military in all their major military actions since the Civil War, including the Mexican-American War. In WWI thirty-one Nez Perce served the US, in what was considered at the time to be "the war to end all wars".

One of the Nez Perce who served in WWI was Henry George. George was born in 1891 at White Bluffs, WA near the Columbia River on what is now the Hanford Site. In the existing documents and records, he has noted connections to Pendleton, OR, Nespelem, WA, Orofino, ID, and Kamiah, ID. Accordingly, it is appropriate that he was born at White Bluffs as it was a well-known meeting place for all the area tribes throughout the Mid-Columbia.

The US entered WW I on April 6, 1917, by declaring war on Germany. Although not recognized as a US citizen, nor not having the right to vote, Henry George volunteered. Along with over twelve-thousand other American Indians who largely volunteered, or were drafted. According to Army reports, the Indian recruits were physically superior to whites and were rarely rejected for physical reasons. Generally, Indians were healthier than others, and records show that they had fewer cases of illness and showed up in camp hospitals less frequently than other troops.

Recorded in his military records, Henry George a scout in the Army who voluntarily enlisted. In civilian life, he was laborer and farmer who raised stock and busted broncos. As a private, he was noted as an exemplary scout for his company and was recognized by every man in the company as being the best in the unit. George fought in the vicinity of Grand Pre, France where on the front he went over the top Sept. 26, 1918, and went through a whole system of German trenches. He did considerable scouting work at the front and showed great endurance and being very reliable. On Oct. 13, 1918, he was killed while on outpost duty near Grand Pre, France. Under Personal Remarks his commanding officer, Lt. Owen H. Perry, with the 77th Division, Co. C, 307th Inf., wrote:

"I was in command of half of the company and had occasion to use [Henry] George several times in scouting. Many times the woods were so thick that it was possible to see for only a few yards, but George without any compass followed the line and I leading the platoon with compass in hand came behind. Invariably George was in front holding the right direction. He acted as scout for me during nine days of fighting at the front, which was continuous. When I sent him out for information almost invariably he brought it back, and the information he gave was always reliable. George was still a scout when I was wounded and set to the rear on October 4th. He remained with the company until he was killed on Oct. 13th [1918] while on outpost duty near Grand Pre [France]. Out of a party of four who were sent out on this duty, three were killed, including George. They were killed by shell fire, and no trace of them was left after the shell had exploded. I found it necessary to put in a new white man every day or so to do scouting work, but George was on duty all the time. George was well liked by the men of the organization and proved to be a good soldier. At the time when he went to the front George's military training was rather limited."

Army commanders found that the Indians had, in the officers' words, "natural characteristics and dispositions" that proved useful. In a survey among commanding officers who had Indians in their units, not only did the officers report that the Indians were the most physically fit but that they had useful abilities. For example, they were the best crawlers and crawled on night patrols. They had "a non-light reflective countenance" at night (Army bureaucratic language for "they were dark skinned"). They had good night vision, were silent at work and stoical under fire, and better than other soldiers at handling the bayonet. Also, they were the best snipers and the best scouts. They seemed to have an innate sense of north and therefore of directions and could always find their ways back to their starting points. They worked better alone than in groups and had a propensity for going out into no man's land in search of Germans. It was noted that they didn't hesitate under fire to go over the top or to risk exposure to machine gun fire to retrieve wounded comrades. These characteristics and habits, the officers said, were peculiar to their race.

Because of their sensed abilities, the Indians were widely used as scouts. As scouts, it was supposed they preferred working alone and going out at night in search of Germans. Their purpose was to secure prisoners from whom information could be taken and they were highly successful. Captured documents told American commanders that the Germans recognized the effects of the Indian night raids. The German colonel of the 97th Landwehrs, for example, issued an order to his battalion commanders at St. Mihiel that because American Indian scouts and runners were on the front, they should detail more snipers to pick off these dangerous men." The cost to American Indians was high: about five percent of Native soldiers were killed in combat, compared to one percent for US troops overall.

After the Great War, 1921 was when many of the US soldiers who died overseas were brought home. Henry George is the only Nez Perce who was Killed in Action on October 13, 1918 and was buried on Sept. 12, 1921. Services were held for him at the Second Presbyterian Church, and Rev. James Hayes delivered an address in Nimipuu-timt. George is currently buried at No Kidd Lane in Kamiah, ID. He was survived by his wife Janette Allen George, and a daughter Elizabeth George. Following WWI in 1919, the American Legion in Kamiah was chartered, and in June 1948, the Legion Hall held dedicatory services for a new hall named the George-Hayes-Curtis post. The name honors the three Kamiah war dead from World War I; Henry George, Axtell Hayes and Thomas Curtis.

A reminder that Veterans Day honors all those who have served the country in war and peace, remembering those who are both deceased and alive, a day set aside to thank all who have served honorably in the military. Remember to thank all the living veterans.

Born in Lapwai (Place of the Butterflies) on the Nez Perce Indian reservation in Idaho in 1924 (or 1926), the young farm hand Clifford Blackeagle enlisted in Spokane, 14 November 1942. Eighteen years old (but perhaps as young as 16), he had completed one year of high school. Pfc. Clifford Blackeagle fought in F Company, 133rd Infantry Regiment, of the 34th Infantry ("Red Bull") Division. In June 1944, it had been reported that this "full-blood Indian" had been seriously wounded in action somewhere on the Italian front May 24, "according to a telegram received by his grandfather, the Rev. Stephen Reuben, Lapwai."

This was the second time, as an earlier newspaper article reported, "Pfc. Blackeagle was wounded Sept. 30 in Italy and was hospitalized in north Africa until March 20, when he returned to active duty with his unit." He was killed on 3 October when his regiment attacked Mount Venera, Italy, which was captured "after a sacrifice four day fight."
